Article: Business and the art of selling (175 words)

Every successful company starts with an idea and a plan. A bold entrepreneur opens a small startup, then must win over investors to survive. The success of a firm depends on demand and supply, and on its ability to turn good ideas into revenue. A business that sells its goods through its own outlet is a retail seller, while one that sells large quantities to shops works as a wholesale supplier.

A modern supply chain links factories, ports and shops, and any disruption can threaten the whole operation. When a firm decides to launch a product, it must beat a rival competitor and protect its name with a trademark. A growing firm may buy a franchise or agree a merger, increasing its market share and total turnover. Some companies thrive in a niche market, where few rivals exist.

Costs matter too. High overhead expenses can reduce profit, and each shareholder expects a return. Above all, customer loyalty is hard to win and easy to lose, so successful firms go the extra mile to keep their buyers happy.
