1 mirror ['mɪrə] n. — зеркало
Glass that shows you your own face.
→ He stood in front of the big mirror for an hour.

2 palace ['pælɪs] n. — дворец
The big house where a king lives.
→ Two strangers came to the palace.

3 basket ['bɑ:skɪt] n. — корзина
A thing made of thin wood that you carry things in.
→ They had an empty basket.

4 tailor ['teɪlə] n. — портной
A person who makes clothes.
→ We are tailors, they said.

5 cloth [klɒθ] n. — ткань
The material that clothes are made of.
→ We make a very special cloth.

6 gold [gəʊld] n. — золото
A very expensive yellow metal.
→ They took gold and ten long needles.

7 needle ['ni:dl] n. — игла
A thin sharp thing that you sew with.
→ They took ten long needles.

8 sew [səʊ] v. — шить
To make or join clothes with a needle.
→ The two tailors sewed nothing.

9 wave [weɪv] v. — махать
To move your hand or a thing in the air.
→ Men waved their hats.

10 point [pɔɪnt] v. — показывать пальцем
To show something with your finger.
→ Then he pointed at him.

11 silent ['saɪlənt] adj. — тихий, безмолвный
With no sound at all.
→ The street went silent.

12 coat [kəʊt] n. — пальто
Clothes that you wear over everything else.
→ Look at the gold flowers on his new coat!

Useful phrases from the story

take care of — заботиться о
Look at this silk. Take care of it.

one by one — по одному
Then more men came, one by one.

The King Who Loved Clothes

The king of Turon loved clothes more than anything in the world. He had one room for his coats and one room for his hats. He changed his clothes six times every day. Every time he stood in front of the big mirror for an hour.

One winter two strangers came to the palace. They had an empty basket. "We are tailors," they said. "We make a very special cloth. It is light and it is beautiful. And it has one strange thing about it."

"What thing?" asked the king. "If a man is clever, he will see the cloth. If a man is stupid, he will see nothing."

The king sat up in his chair. If he wore that cloth, he would find every stupid man in his palace in one day. "Start today," he said. "Take everything you need."

They took gold. They took ten long needles. They took a big room, and they locked the door. Every morning the two men came back and worked all day. Nobody could go in.

After a week the king sent his oldest servant to look. The old man went into the room. The table was empty. The two tailors were moving their hands over the empty table, and they were smiling.

"Look at these flowers," said one man. "Look at this silk! Take care of it."

The old servant looked and looked. He saw nothing at all. Then he thought about his house, and his family, and his forty years of work.

"Beautiful," he said. "The flowers are very beautiful."

Then more men came, one by one. Every man stood in the empty room. Every man saw nothing. And every man said the same thing, because nobody wanted to be the stupid one.

On the last night the two tailors sewed nothing with their empty needles.

In the morning they dressed the king. The king stood in front of the mirror with no clothes on, and he looked at himself for a long time. "Well," he said. "It is lighter than I thought."

Then he walked out into the street. The whole city was waiting for him. Men waved their hats. Women shouted, "Look at the gold flowers on his new coat!"

A small boy was sitting on his father's shoulders. He looked at the king for a long time. Then he pointed at him. "He has no clothes on," said the boy.

The street went silent. Then one man laughed. Then another man laughed. Soon the whole street was laughing at the king.

And behind the people, two strangers were walking out of the city with a very heavy basket.

The king did not stop. He walked to the end of the road with his head high, because if he stopped now, the boy was right.

