Last summer my family and I went to the mountains for a week. We had never been there before, so everybody was excited. On the first day we were walking along a river when it started to rain. We ran to a small café, and the owner, an old man, gave us hot tea. "I have lived here since 1970," he said. "I used to be a shepherd, but now I cook for tourists." He showed us photos of the village when he was young: there were no roads and no cars. Before we left, my little brother asked him, "Will you be here next year?" The old man smiled: "If you come back, I'll make you my best plov." We are going to visit him again next summer.
