Last summer, Bekzod stayed with his grandfather in a small village. Every morning they strolled to the river. Grandpa was calm and patient, and he had a nice habit: he fed the village dogs. "Animals behave well when people are kind," he said.

One morning Bekzod saw a big dog in the street. It began to shake its head and growl. "Avoid that dog," a neighbor said. "It frequently bites people." But Grandpa wasn't concerned. "Don't punish a dog because it is scared," he said. "Be positive and expect the best." He instructed Bekzod to stand still and speak softly. That was the appropriate thing to do. Slowly the dog lay down at their feet. It was content.

The story spread fast. That evening the village school talked about the issue of street dogs, and Bekzod represented his class. "None of the dogs are bad," he said. "They just need kindness." Everybody clapped.
