IELTS Turbo · Week 1 · Sat 31 Oct 2026 · Education

Writing Task 2: opinion (agree or disagree)

Schoolteachers are more responsible for students' educational success than parents and other family members. Do you agree or disagree?

Question: Dilshodbek Ravshanov (Band 9.0), Telegram, 5 Oct 2026 · https://t.me/ieltsaidbydilshodbek/8339

40 minutes · at least 250 words · typed on the computer. Plan for 5 minutes, write for 30, check for 5.

Your plan

Introduction	Paraphrase the question in one sentence. Then give your position clearly: agree, disagree, or partly agree.
Body 1	Your first and strongest reason. Explain it, then give one specific example.
Body 2	Your second reason, with an example from real life (your country, your school, a study).
Body 3 (optional)	The other side in one or two sentences, then show why your view is still stronger.
Conclusion	Repeat your position in new words. No new ideas.

Before you hand it in

- ☐ Your position is in the introduction AND the conclusion, and it is the same.
- ☐ Every body paragraph starts with one clear main idea.
- ☐ Each main idea has a specific example (a number, a country, a real situation).
- ☐ 250 words or more (aim for 270 to 300). Count on the computer.
- ☐ At least 5 phrases from the vocabulary table, used naturally.

IELTS Turbo · Week 1 · Sat 31 Oct 2026 · Education

Model answer

Written for this lesson · 310 words · the highlighted phrases are in the vocabulary table.

It is sometimes argued that schoolteachers play a bigger role in a child's academic achievement than parents or other relatives. While teachers clearly matter, I disagree with this view, because the family shapes a child's habits long before school begins and continues to support learning outside the classroom.

To begin with, the foundations of learning are laid at home. Children who grow up surrounded by books, conversation and curiosity tend to arrive at school with a wider vocabulary and a longer attention span. These early advantages are difficult for any teacher to recreate, since a teacher meets a child only after the most formative years have passed. Moreover, attitudes towards education are largely inherited: if parents treat homework as a priority and praise effort rather than talent, children are far more likely to persevere when lessons become demanding.

In addition, the time a teacher can give each pupil is severely limited. A typical class may contain thirty students, and a single teacher can devote only a few minutes to any one of them during a lesson. Parents, by contrast, can notice when their child is struggling, discuss the problem in the evening and arrange extra help, such as private tutoring or a language course. In my country, for instance, many families invest a considerable share of their income in after-school classes, which often make the decisive difference in entrance examinations.

Admittedly, an inspiring teacher can transform a student's attitude to a subject, and for children from difficult home backgrounds, school may be the only place where learning is valued. However, such cases show that teachers can compensate for a lack of family support, not that they are generally more influential.

In conclusion, although teachers contribute significantly to academic success, I believe parents and relatives bear greater responsibility, as they create the conditions in which learning either thrives or fails.

Authentic sample answer

Read the Band 9 sample by Dilshodbek Ravshanov (Band 9.0):
https://t.me/ieltsaidbydilshodbek/8339

Compare: which reasons did he choose? How did he give examples? Which of his phrases would you use?

Vocabulary from the model answer

Phrase	Meaning	Similar words you can use play a bigger role in	be more important for	have a greater influence on · be more decisive for · matter more to academic achievement	good results at school or university	educational success · academic performance · progress at school
the foundations of learning are laid	the first, most basic skills are built	the groundwork is done · the basis is formed · learning begins
attention span	how long you can concentrate	concentration · focus · ability to stay on task
formative years	early years that shape a person	early childhood · the most important years of development
persevere	keep trying when it is hard	persist · keep going · not give up demanding	difficult, needs a lot of effort	challenging · tough · intellectually hard devote (time) to	give time to	dedicate · spend · allocate time to by contrast	on the other hand (shows a difference)	in contrast · conversely · whereas invest a considerable share of	spend a large part of (money, time)	spend a significant proportion of · put a lot of money into
make the decisive difference	be the reason for success	be the key factor · tip the balance · determine the result transform someone's attitude to	change how someone feels about	reshape · completely change · turn around someone's view of compensate for	make up for something missing	make up for · offset · fill the gap left by bear greater responsibility	be more responsible	be more accountable · carry more of the burden
thrive	grow and do very well	flourish · prosper · succeed

Notice in the authentic sample

Phrase	Meaning	Similar words
parental involvement	parents taking part in a child's learning	parents' participation · family support
extracurricular activities	classes and clubs outside the school program	after-school activities · out-of-school courses
cognitive development	the growth of thinking skills	intellectual development · mental growth
a positive learning environment	a place that helps you learn	a supportive atmosphere for study
the school curriculum	everything a school officially teaches	the syllabus · the school program
guardians	adults legally caring for a child	caregivers · carers

Use it: write your own essay on the same question and use at least five of these phrases. Mark them in your text.