A Future Pilot

Rustam has always loved planes. When he was a child, he used to watch them from the roof of his house. Now he is sixteen, and he is studying math and physics at school. He also studies English every day, because all pilots need it.

Last summer he worked as a volunteer at the airport. He helped passengers and learned a lot. Since then he has completed a first-aid course and he has already received a certificate. His teacher says he is the most motivated student in the class.

Next year Rustam is going to apply to a flight school. “It won't be easy,” he says, “but I have a clear plan. In ten years I'll be flying passengers around the world, and at some moment I'll be looking down at Tashkent from the sky.” What will you be doing in ten years?
