My Grandfather's Childhood

My grandfather grew up in a small village near Bukhara. He often tells us about his childhood. “We didn't use to have a TV or a phone,” he says. “We used to play outside all day.”

Every morning he used to get up at five and fetch water from the well. After that he used to walk three kilometers to school. His favorite game was hide-and-seek, and he used to hide in the haystack. His mother used to cook bread every Friday, and the whole street used to smell of it.

In the evening his family used to sit together. His grandmother used to tell stories and sing lullabies. “I didn't use to be a good student,” he laughs. “But I used to listen very carefully to those stories. That's why I love books now.”
