The Library Girl

There is a small library in our town. It is the place where I spent most of my childhood. The librarian, who is called Mrs. Karimova, knows every book that we have.

When I was nine, I used to go there every day after school. I didn't use to talk much, but I read everything that I could find. Mrs. Karimova often recommended books that were exciting, and she always gave me the ones which had pictures.

Now I am a student and I have a library card for the university library, but I still visit the small library where my reading started. I always take a book which I haven't read before, and I think of the girl who sat there with a big book on her knees.
