A Difficult Choice

Farhod has a dilemma. A company in Tashkent has offered him a job, and a university in London has offered him a place. He can't decide. He talks to his friends and writes a list of pros and cons.

“If I take the job, I'll earn money, but I won't study,” he says. “If I went to London, I'd study, but I wouldn't have much money. I wouldn't see my family very often, either.” His friend Aziz listens carefully. “If I were you, I'd go to London,” he says. “The advantage is that you'll learn English and meet new people.”

Farhod thinks about it for a week. In the end, he chooses London. “If I stay here, I'll always wonder what life in London is like,” he says. “If I go, I'll try. And if it doesn't work, I'll come back.” Would you make the same decision?
