Then and Now

In 1970 my grandfather had to get permission from the government to travel abroad. He didn't have to pay a lot of money, but he had to wait for months. “Nobody could just buy a ticket and go,” he says.

Today things are different. People don't have to ask for permission for many countries, but they still have to show a passport, and for some countries they have to get a visa. My sister had to fill in a long form for her visa last year.

I think the rules will change again. In the future we will probably have to use a digital ID, and we won't have to carry a passport at all. What will you have to do in 2050 that your parents didn't have to do?

WORD HELP

government — правительство permission — разрешение abroad — за границу

Read it aloud two times. Then close the page and tell your partner three things you remember.
