Strict Parents?

Nilufar is sixteen and she thinks her parents are very strict. They let her stay out until nine on weekends, but they make her do her homework first. Her friends are allowed to stay out until eleven.

She isn't allowed to use her phone at the table, and her mother doesn't let her watch TV on school nights. “It's unfair,” says Nilufar. “My cousin's parents let him do almost everything.”

Her father listens and smiles. “When I was your age,” he says, “my parents made me work in the garden every day, and I wasn't allowed to go out at all. We just want you to be safe. When you are eighteen, you will be allowed to decide for yourself.” Nilufar sighs, but she understands a little.
